

Extract from letter from Katie Hunt, March 5, 1926.

The power formed in this sacred sanctum has been used to the very best advantage to-day; to give to the world the highest and best in attracting their eyes and thoughts upward, and to have them aspire to higher things. This, Mama, is the purpose of our sweetly silent hour, and, as the good, faithful Patriot Band has said, no greater institution was ever established for the growth and advance of the world, and to bring knowledge, than the hour set aside for special work. So, while the time seems slow when we are anticipating the writing of my love letter to you, we know that the time has been wisely and consistently spent for the good and uplift of the human family. And, oh! Mama, this great power is in the hands and under the control of intelligent minds and goes forth on its purpose wisely directed to construct and reconstruct wherever such work is needed, and their well-laid plans are carried out from this, my darling little room, that has been for nearly two score years a big factor in working out many of the problems of the mortal world.

The great restlessness in the world marks a desire to learn and to be free from superstition, and to receive facts; restlessness is a splendid symptom, opening up broader fields of research and investigation.